To Whom It May Concern:

My name is Taras Lumiere and I am a practicing doctor in a medical group in Sacramento, California. I am a licensed doctor of chiropractic and acupuncturist with a master's degree in counseling psychology. I have been in private practice consistently since 1983, with two short stints as an instructor, one at an acupuncture college, one at a massage therapy school. In most of my years I have worked in larger (compared to most 2 or 3 doctor practices) multi-disciplinary medical groups.

I have used NeuroModulation technique since my initial training in March 2003 and Advanced Training that fall. I have employed it in a wide variety of cases, especially for pain, allergies, infections, fatigue, and digestive disorders, and currently 60-75% of the cases receive NMT. NMT is taught by use of the NMT seminar manual and I use these manuals daily for reference.

The system works as disclosed, is specific in its application and has helped relieve many patients of their symptoms. I follow the suggestions and guidelines of the founder, Les Feinberg, and am involved in an on-line support and learning group devoted to NMT on the internet. It's extremely well thought out and useful in treating patients.

An interesting case yesterday: a 33-year old woman came in quite pregnant and wanting a normal delivery. She was one week late, no known reason why except "it runs in the family". She came in with her best friend who I had also treated before for an overdue first baby. I had treated this mom one year previously (no contractions or signs of labor during her office visit) using NMT pathways and told her to give it a few days. She delivered 8 hours later, and was very pleased to say the least. By building greater integrity between the mother and fetus, improving regulation between the two, and clearing many information faults, NMT was a very safe and gentle alternative to inducing labor, the only other option her medical doctor offered. Almost daily I'll have a patient come in with the beginning of an upper respiratory infection or flu and we're able to modulate the immune system and clear it with NMT before they lose time from work.
